No. XII.

To the People of the United States.

IN attempting to describe the calamities of a revolution in this country, I feel myself much burthened with the subject, and scarcely know where to begin, or what method to purfue. The ides of a revolution, inftantly brings almoft every inhabitant of this country knows enough, to shudder at the bare contemplation. The time has been, when we were all elated with the visionary prospect of separating good, not only to France, but to all the world, from the spreading of the principles of freedom. We had paffed thro' what was termed a Revolution, with fuccefs, we found ourselves flourishing, and happy, and fondly hoped that the reft of the world were following our example. At this time, enthusiasm, and not experience, was our guide. If we had diftinct ideas, we should have inftantly seen, that there was a mighty difference between our refisting the attempts of Great Britain, to oppress us by power, and the revolution rising in a mafs to overthrow the government which had for ages been eftablished over it, and to deftroy at the fame moment, all order, reftraint, and fecurity of property. Some of the government to demolish, no king to dethrone. We only claimed the right of doing as we had always done—governing ourselves, and we refolved to refift to the laft, every attempt, from abroad, to impofe on us a new government. Great Britain perished, and we entered the field of battle in defence of our privileges. The event was fuccefsful, and we were acknowledged by her, & the reft of the world, to be, what we claimed ourfelves to be, a free, independent nation

We then again went on with the work of governing ourselves. Some of the ftates made new conftitutions; fome of them retained thofe which they had before the war began. The whole agreed to be one nation, and eftablished their prefent government. Thus in a fhort hiftory of what is term ed the American Revolution. Does it bear any resemblance to the French people rising by mafs and pulling down all authority to eftablish the reign of anarchy, terror, and bloodfhed: and to fubdue, and enflave all the nations around them?

But, if our prefent government is to be deftroyed, it muft be by another revolution. We fhall then have deftroyed a government under which we have lived, and profpered, and fhall be forced to truft to chance for a new one, hoping for a happy iffue. This may be the Jacobinical heart, however trifling it may be deemed by the inconfiderate, a few moments reflection will convince us to be loathed, and the wife, that it is an evil part to be fighted.

When we are reflecting on the fubject of a revolution, it will be neceffa to conider what is to be fuffered, in accomplishing it. The firft ftep we take, will ftrike the mind, that we have to lofe all the bleffings of the prefent government. I need not enumerate them. They have been incidentally touched heretofore in the numerous effays of this and underftood; and ought to be profeffedly, and devoutly acknowledged, and prized. I have no hefitation in faying, that this country has been thoroughly ftripped of its Jacobinism, and the predominent left to a fair operation, there is not an honeft native inhabitant of the United States, that would willingly exchange his condition for that of France. He fhould there be a lolitary inftance of a difcontented mind, that France would be the laft country on earth he would chofe to refide in.

If we look at France, there is fcarcely a poffibility that we fhall efcape a civil war. In thefe an civil fo great, which ever afflicts nations, as this? Let the example of other nations fhew the conflict. In the reign of Charles the firft of Great Britain, a great part of the nation became convinced that the government was tyrannical, and the people oppreffive. Rebellion enfued; the parties flew to arms, the country was for many years deluged in blood; thoufands of lives were facrificed; and the ifland became a fcene of every fpecies of horror, and confufion. Juftice was perverted, the nation, worn down, wafted, and wearied, with the defpotifm of a Democrat, voluntarily united to depofe the fon of the Pretender, and to invite back to the crown, the fon of that king, whofe blood had been fpilt on the fcaffold. That, after thirty or forty years of war, and mifery, the contefted in the end in reftoring to the very government which they had deftroyed, for fafety and protection, againft that which their demagogues had fet up.

A little more than feven years ago, the French nation, having previoufly deftroyed their old government, broke their king alfo to the fcaffold. All the forms, and fhords, which immorality, and atheism could engender, were let loofe upon the people. war, murders, executions, robberies, pacfhacy of manners, impunity, and atheifm, broke in upon the nation like a flood ; every fpecies of injuftice was practifed with impunity ; conftitution after conftitution was formed, and deftroyed and the heads of every party fell by the hands of the executioner ; and finally, the nation, wearied out with revolutions has funk under ages ago government, more deftotic then any monarchy in Europe. The people have been gulled, plundered, and deluded, by each fucceeding demagogue, until an obfcure foreigner has grafped the government, fanctified every trace of Republicanism from the countenance of it, with foreign red, deals out law to an enflaved, and ruined people.

Are not thefe inftances of the effects of revolutions, folemn leffons to all otherwife blind ? Can any people fhare a worfe fate, provided we try the revolutionary ordeal ? Let us bear in mind, that there will be circumftances attending a civil war in this country, which have ftill more peculiarly a horrible and terrible. We are now fatally divided into parties, members of each party are difperfed thro' the country ; and tho' in the northern ftates, the balance is greatly in favour of Federal ty, yet there are Jacobins enough, even here, to divide, and diftract us, with their arms in their ftore, and their wickedneffe—When thefe paffions have been taken care, we muft expect all the hearty, and animofities, which have but exifted here in a degree ftifled, and kept under, will break out with tenfold fury. Unreftrained by law, or the fear of punishment, every deadly paffion will have full fcope, private quarrels will be revenged, and public feuds and rivalfh ps will call forth the bitterefl hate and vengeance. Neighbours will become the enemies of neighbours, brothers of blood, fathers of their fons, and fons of their fathers. Murder, robbery, plunder, and havock, and mifery will be openly taught and practifed, the a will be rent with the cries of diftreffe, the foil foaked with blood, and the nation black with crimes. Where is the heart that can contemplate fuch a fcene, without fhudering with horror!

Jacobins, in all countries, are deftitute of morality and religion. Our own are as fcarce, and they only want an opportunity to be as cruel and abandoned, as thofe of France When our government is gone, this opportunity will be found, and we muft then look for the fame fcenes, which France has experienced. Thefe miferies confift not only in the wafte of perfonal fecurity, peace, and freedom ; they conftft principally in the introduction of the moft univerfal depravity of manners, overthrow of integrity, juftice, benevolence, friendfhip, and affection and fubftituting difhonefty, injuftice, cruelty, revenge, and hatred In fuch a community parental ties, filial duty, conjugal tenderneft and fidelity, and focial intercourfe, are contemned, reciprocated, and deftroyed. What a dreadful fcene! Such is a great nation like France, in which every thing is new, and endearing, in which, "whatfoever things are juft, pure, lovely, and of good report," are done away—to fee 25 millions of frail, fhort, accountable beings, openly denying God, reviling his attributes, profaning his holy name, banifhing every veftige of his worfhip, and accommitting without remorfe, time after time, crimes, which every child of reafon muft know, and remember, that He, who has declared in the thunders of Sinai, that he "will not hold him guiltlefs, who fhall take his name in vain," has alfo declared, that he will pour out his fury upon a people who "know him not, who call not upon his name," and who tryfically a great friend to the people; and the people were doomed for many years to groan under a bondage vaftly more int derable, than any they ever inflicted, even by the worft of their kings. Thefe days, that the nation, worn down, wafted, and wearied, with the defpotifm of a Democrat, voluntarily united
